The Department of Humanities, Uka Tarsadia University organized the 77th Independence Day celebration on 11th August 2023 at Mandap Auditorium, of the Architecture department. The celebration included a variety of programs such as Solo Singing, Group Singing, Solo Dancing, Group Dancing, Skit, and Speech. The event was a remarkable success with enthusiastic participation from each and every student of the Department of Humanities in one or more than one programs.

Anjani, a student of BA Psychology (Sem 1), and Garvisha, a student of BA Psychology (Sem 3) hosted the event. The event commenced with a singing program that set the tone for patriotic fervor. There were a total of two groups and three solo singing performances. It was followed by an enthralling dance program that evoked the spirit of pride and unity. There were a total of one group and two solo dance performances. It was followed by the delivery of powerful speeches by three participants which reminded audiences of their duties and responsibilities and inspired them to work for the betterment of the nation. It was further followed by two thought-provoking skits emphasizing the value of concentrating on important national issues rather than engaging in pointless debates and reminding everyone that Independence Day should not be treated merely as a national holiday but should be celebrated with the utmost admiration by hoisting the national flag. At the end of all the programs, the esteemed faculty members shared their valuable feedback with the participants. The event ended with the singing of the national anthem bringing everyone together in a spirit of respect and patriotism for the country.
